Intermittency and multistability of drug release from polymeric delivery system: A review. Release of drugs from polymeric carriers is controlled by different mechanisms, which ultimately lead to the attainment of one of the following ways of delivery of the drug: slow, sustained or immediate release profile. These can be achieved either by the growth or the destruction of the polymeric matrix, which is governed by the laws of physical, chemical and biological sciences, or by the reduction or increase of the pore space available for the passage of the drug. Imprinting techniques, nanoparticles technology, micro-encapsulation technology and other smart nanoparticles are the successful approaches for improving the release characteristics of the polymeric matrix. This review also demonstrates the role of the polymer-based nanofilms in controlling release of drug or gene from the polymeric matrix. Páginas sábado, 9 de noviembre de 2012 Iraqi prime minister: Iran behind missile attacks Iraqi prime minister Nouri al-Maliki, said Iran had planted the short-range missiles in Iraq in order to serve as proxies in a region where Tehran opposes Shiite influence and sees its political ambitions threatened. Iran has denied any involvement in the rocket attacks that have killed three people in Iraq since Saturday, and Nouri al-Maliki, the country's prime minister, said the rockets appeared to have been launched from Iran. "I am speaking as the prime minister of Iraq today and on behalf of Iraqi security services... I declare that the criminal elements that infiltrated Iraq to carry out these missiles attacks are affiliated with the Iranian regime and the Iranian Revolutionary Guards," Maliki said. He did not specify how he reached that conclusion. Maliki said the missiles fell in Iraq's northern province of Salah al-Din, near the Iranian border and that Iran would bear "full responsibility" for the attacks. Military and security officials in Baghdad said that their version of events was different, accusing Iran of "sowing discord" in Iraq. The officials said the attacks were designed to heighten tensions in the country, to put pressure on the government in Baghdad to get tough on Iran. A military official in Iraq's Kurdish region accused Tehran of fomenting protests over Iran's arrest of a top Iraqi Kurdish official
