Hyperloop: The world's fastest train Is Hyperloop One the visionary who will take the world to the next frontier? There are more than a few reasons to get excited about the Hyperloop One — the world's fastest train, designed to carry passengers and cargo in pods at speeds as high as 750 miles per hour. And it's hardly the first new technology to claim to be better than the competition: think flying cars and personal spacecraft — this could be the latest trend. California is the first market to get on board with this new mode of transport. And its a big one, with Los Angeles, San Francisco and Chicago now looking into the future. At the heart of the Hyperloop is this: an open-air tube that moves at speeds of up to 750 miles per hour through a network of vacuum tubes and magnetic levitation. In other words, it's a vacuum chamber with a heavily pneumatic system that creates a super-compressed air cushion between two conductors that run on magnets. The idea has been around since the 1960s, when it was imagined by a now-famous engineer in Germany, Heinrich Himmler, and was later hailed by Dr. Frank J. Tipler. At the time of its invention, it was described as a major change in transportation, allowing passengers to speed from city to city (and even around the world) in mere hours. The creator of the Hyperloop (and its CEO) was known as a visionary. This is hardly the first time the man's taken a stand on the future of technology. In his 25-year career, Elon Musk has been obsessed with the need for renewable energy, but his past big projects have largely fallen on deaf ears. The idea of improving the hydrogen and fuel cell technologies currently underway is another example of Musk's never-say-die attitude, as he's been working on them for over a decade. So can the Hyperloop One build the revolution in transportation it claims to? It's fast, it's futuristic, and it's cheap The Hyperloop is environmentally friendly and relatively inexpensive, as the majority of the components are already commercially available. The whole idea is to cut out the use b7e8fdf5c8

Although Germany have won back-to-back World Cups in 2014 and 2018, the world champions have yet to match the feat achieved by Brazil in 1994 and their current run of form is reminiscent of the 1990s. Before the 2018 World Cup the German FA released their own predictions of which player(s) and team(s) would be crowned world champions. They highlighted that in the following five years Germany could win eight major tournaments, which would be the most in their history. Russia 2018 could mark their second World Cup title. However, beyond the win many were left thinking that the biggest success in Russian football would be the world title itself. Whether it is just the beginning of a golden age or yet another disappointment, only time will tell. Germany's World Cup run in Russia The German FA

1. Creates a custom event log 2. Cautions about custom event logs 3. Notes on working with custom event log 4. Custom logging EventLists (controls a system-wide Event Log) 5. Events can be disabled or enabled 6. Creates a template for a custom event log 7. Notes on event logging This article is going to provide an overview of how to use eventcreate2, and hopefully get you started. We are going to take a common Windows service, and use eventcreate2 to create a custom event log that will hold trace information for our service. We will use the trace information to help us debug a difficult to reproduce service hang. We start by selecting Tools>Add or Remove Tools. In the menu that comes up select Custom Tools. Next, we select Custom Tools>Event Create To create the event log we select File-New-Event Log. The event log must be configured to start at a high priority, so we select Information. The log must be configured to log everything, so we select Full from the drop down menu. We want to create two events in the log: 1. Event 1 - Event #1 2. Event 2 - Event #1 the Event 1 and Event 2 describe the events that were logged. We will demonstrate a typical Event List using this set of events. NOTE: if you are not familiar with the syntax of event create, we recommend that you use eventcreate to create a couple of sample event logs, and then use event create to create your own event log. In the Event Log Name box we type the name of the event log we want to create. Event Logs have a default name, but we are going to name our log {app name}-Service1 - where {app name} is the name of our application. We will keep this name later. Next we use the Date Modified box to create the date the event log will be created. Let's change this to the time that we want to create the event. The build we are using to produce this article will create event logs in the Logs folder of the eventlog.dir file. But, I will create the event log in the Windows directory. If you are creating an event log in the Logs folder you must first create the Logs folder and a symbolic link from the Windows directory to the Logs folder. Once you have
